

Building of a Force To Raid Nicaragua Denied by Argentina

Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, March 11 — A Foreign Ministry official said today that, contrary to continuing reports, Argentina was not working with other Latin American countries to assemble a paramilitary force that they planned to infiltrate into Nicaragua for hit-and-run attacks.

The official, who asked to remain unidentified, said the ministry had been making the same denial for days on being asked about the reports. He said that the Government continued "to deny that Argentina has troops or military advisers in El Salvador, or is promoting the creation of an inter-American force."

Foreign Ministry officials said, however, that they could not speak for military intelligence. On being asked about the reports, Argentine army and air force spokesmen referred all questions back to the Foreign Ministry.

The subject also came up at a news conference that Thomas O. Enders, the Under Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, had in Santiago, Chile, Wednesday night before returning to Washington after a weeklong Latin American tour that included visits to Argentina and Venezuela.
